The bridal salon The Back Bay Bride has been a Boston institution for over 50 years. Generations of women have entered the brownstone searching for the perfect dress in which to celebrate their love. Claire Connor is The Back Bay Bride's top seller. She has a knack of picking the perfect wedding dress for each blushing bride. Claire was on her way to becoming a blushing bride herself before her boyfriend died suddenly. Now, Claire is lost in her grief and she's searching for a reason to love again.

Patrick McKenna is one of Boston's most sought after historic architects. His specialty is taking old and worn spaces and finding the beauty in them. He works with couple after couple watching how the renovation process lays the inner workings of their relationship bare - a process that can either end or strengthen love. Now, Patrick has purchased a brownstone of his own to renovate. After he completes the Back Bay Bride renovation he's ready to find and build a relationship of his own.

But when Patrick and Claire find that they're both planning on spending the next month in the small studio apartment above The Back Bay Bride, neither has a back up living situation. Sparks fly as walls are knocked down both physically and emotionally. They'll both find that while they're going to have to learn to share the small space, they will also have to learn how to share their hearts to find happiness.
