Dog Food Love: Allergy-Free Recipes, Vegetarian Edition: Homemade Dog Food Guide Included

This book contains more than 45 cooked and dehydrated recipes to make for your dog, and the Homemade Dog Food Guide is included for free. You no longer have to worry about tainted treats, or what chemicals are hidden in your dog's food. Whether you want to add some healthy treats to your dog's diet, make a dog celebration special, top off your dog's regular food with something irresistible, or make the switch entirely to homemade food, you'll find great ideas here. Once you try this, you will see how easy it is to feed your dog fresh food. You will also find help for allergies, information for supplements, and more. Try some recipes and see what your dog thinks.

These recipes are for vegetarians and vegans who would like to make treats for their dogs, and also for those considering a meat-free diet for their dogs. Since everyone has varying restrictions, some recipes and references will be for non-vegan and non-vegetarian foods, such as: honey, dairy products, organic eggs, and fish for pescatarians.

The Getting Started Guide was first written for the Dog Food Love: Cooked Edition, a meat-based diet for dogs. For this edition most references to meat have been eliminated to avoid offense. A few additional recipes and supplement information have been left in this edition, as I would rather offer more information than you need, as opposed to not enough information.

This is what I learned after 14 years dealing with my dogs' many allergies and making homemade foods for them off and on since 2000. Now after three years of feeding my dogs only homemade foods I've put this together in eBook format. The treats alone are worth it, so I'm told, even if you don't want to change to 100% homemade food.

The treats and special occasion recipes should be good for dogs of all ages, as long as the main meals follow the recommendations of your veterinarian for your dog's unique needs.
