Losing your parents at any age is very difficult, but the younger you are the worse it is. Frances Ive was only 26 when her father died and she had neither the maturity or knowledge to handle grief. As she discovered, repressed grief can cause illness and unhappiness.

This is a personal account about losing parents, but in this revised e-book it includes the loss of a very close friend, also a devastating experience. However, the book has a positive outlook. We do grow and become who we are because of all our experiences, both positive and negative. One reader claimed, 'Everyone should read this book, even if their parents are alive, so they can learn to appreciate them before it's too late'.

As one rea
