This evening turned out to be even worse. In the middle of the woods, Chantelle's car stopped for no obvious reason. She checked the car's gas level, and then went out to see if there was a flat tire, but no luck. It seemed the car was perfectly OK, but it simply wouldn't start anymore.

Swearing in anger, Chantelle suddenly noticed a light in the woods. It looked like there was a cottage out there; she decided to ask for help there.

She left her car and went deep in the woods. It was a small house, Chantelle was right, and the windows were lit.

She was about to knock on the door when she saw an enormous figure approaching her. This noisy giant was a bear!

He reared onto his hind legs as if to attack Chantelle, and she screamed.

The next moment, she realized that the bear had grabbed her to draw even deeper into the woods.

"Help me, somebody, please, help me!" she cried.

The bear shook her as if he wanted the girl to be silent. Chantelle was so frightened that she broke off.

A few minutes later, they stopped in front of another house; it was much smaller, and there was no light inside.

"Get in!" the bear suddenly ordered.
