Excerpt from Artisans and Machinery: The Moral and Physical Condition of the Manufacturing Population, Considered With Reference to Mechanical Substitutes for Human Labour

The great importance of the subjects discussed in the following pages will be understood, by saying that they involve questions of the highest interest to our commercial relations, and the welfare of the entire kingdom. The declension of the most numerous class of artisans in Great Britain, from comfort, morality, independence, and loyalty, to misery, demoralization, dependence, and discontent, is the painful picture now presented by the domestic manufacturers. The hand-loom weavers, whether of cotton, linen, worsted, or silk, and the multitude engaged in bobbinnet, lace, and other manufacturing processes, still carried on as household labour, together with all other industrious classes, on whose path steam-machinery is advancing, present a most interesting and anxious subject for examination.
